ABOUT THE AREA

Luxor, a city in Upper Egypt, is often referred to as the world's largest open-air museum, a testament to its rich and storied past. The city occupies the site of ancient Thebes, the capital of Egypt during the New Kingdom (c. 1550–1070 BCE), and its modern name is derived from the Arabic word al-Uqsur, meaning 'the palaces' or 'the forts.' The city is divided by the Nile River into two distinct banks, each with its own incredible concentration of historical monuments. The East Bank, home to the modern city, features the colossal Luxor Temple and the massive Karnak Temple Complex, which was the main place of worship for the Theban Triad of gods.

The West Bank, historically known as the 'City of the Dead,' served as a vast royal and noble necropolis. This side of the river is home to some of the most famous archaeological sites in the world, including the Valley of the Kings and the Valley of the Queens. The Valley of the Kings contains over 60 known tombs, including the remarkably preserved burial site of Tutankhamun. The West Bank also features the Mortuary Temple of Queen Hatshepsut and the Colossi of Memnon, two massive stone statues of Pharaoh Amenhotep III. The sheer scale and number of these monuments make Luxor an unparalleled destination for those interested in ancient Egyptian history and civilization.

Tourism is the lifeblood of Luxor's economy. The city relies heavily on the constant flow of international visitors who come to witness its extraordinary collection of temples and tombs. The local economy is driven by services for tourists, including hotels, restaurants, guided tours, and the sale of souvenirs. Agriculture, particularly the cultivation of sugarcane, also plays a significant role in the local economy. The reliance on tourism has made the city's economy vulnerable to political instability and global events that impact travel. However, ongoing efforts by the Egyptian government and international organizations aim to strengthen and diversify the city's economic base while preserving its invaluable heritage.

For travelers, Luxor is most conveniently accessed via its own airport. The nearest and most prominent airport is Luxor International Airport (LXR), which is located approximately 6 kilometers east of the city. This airport serves as the primary gateway for tourists visiting the region, handling both international and domestic flights. For those arriving from other parts of Egypt or the world, other nearby airports include Sohag International Airport (HMB) and Aswan International Airport (ASW), though they are a greater distance from Luxor.
