ABOUT THE AREA

Nestled in the Alicante province of the Valencian Community, Crevillent (also known as Crevillente) is a charming and historic town situated at the foot of the dramatic Serra de Crevillent mountain range. Known for its rich cultural identity, the municipality beautifully balances traditional charm with a vibrant local economy historically rooted in agriculture, carpet-making, and manufacturing.

The town's geography is a striking contrast of rugged mountain landscapes and fertile agricultural plains, known locally as the Hoya de Crevillent. This unique environment offers fantastic opportunities for outdoor enthusiasts, with numerous hiking and cycling trails winding through the nearby sierras. Panoramic views from the peaks stretch across the surrounding Baix Vinalopo comarca all the way toward the Mediterranean coast.

Culturally, Crevillent is widely celebrated for its deeply moving and elaborate Holy Week (Semana Santa) celebrations, which have been declared festivals of International Tourist Interest. The town features stunning religious art, notably works by the famed local sculptor Mariano Benlliure, housed across its churches and museums. Visitors can also explore the local gastronomy, which showcases robust inland Valencian flavors, including traditional rice dishes and local sweets.

Travelers looking to visit the area will find that the nearest airport is Alicante-Elche Miguel Hernandez Airport (ALC). Located approximately 25 kilometers (about 15 miles) east of the town, the airport provides convenient international and domestic connections, allowing for a quick drive or transit commute of roughly 20 to 30 minutes straight to Crevillent.
