ABOUT THE AREA

Saint-Jean-aux-Bois is a commune in the Oise department in northern France. Cross the small bridge that spans the ru des Planchettes stream and pass through the two towers into the circle of small houses that surround the majestic abbatial church, described by painter Francois Rouan as 'the showstopper'. Next to it lies the botanic garden, a playful and bucolic world to explore. You are at the heart of the Forest of Compiègne, where you'll be able to disconnect and create memories that will last a lifetime.

Formerly very popular with the kings and princes of France, the Oise boasts its fantastic architecture and its landscapes alternating between forests, fields and hedged farmland. This place is an equestrianism Mecca with its vast forests great for this sports activity and its famous Horse town, Chantilly, where the most prestigious horse races take place. The Oise also has an important religious heritage: Chaalis, Lieu-Restauré, Ourscamp and Moncel abbeys, and the Gothic cathedrals of Beauvais, Senlis and Noyon.

Mercifully the superb Gothic cathedral of Saint Pierre survived the onslaught on Beauvais in World War II. Its chancel is the highest in the world rising to 46.8 metres. In the Bishop's Palace is the regional museum of the Oise and there are still workshops of the ancient art of tapestry which prevailed for many years there. To the west, the pretty fortified village of Gerberoy overlooks the countryside of the Bray and beyond is the superb Benedictine Abbey at Saint-Germer-De-Fly. On the banks of the Oise, the cathedral of the Romanesque town of Noyon is a 'monument historique'.
