ABOUT THE AREA

Derrynoose is a village and civil parish in south County Armagh, Northern Ireland, 4.5 km south-west of Keady. The village lies partly in the townland of Mullyard and partly in the townland of Crossnamoyle.

Northern Ireland's smallest county, Armagh, knows how to punch above its weight. Its big open-hearted nature means within minutes of arriving, we'll make you feel like one of our own. Whether that's meeting the wildlife at Lough Neagh, exploring an ancient pagan ceremonial site, or tasting the cider that inspires the Orchard County's name.

Fans of St. Patrick are in for a treat. The story goes he built a church here back in 445AD. Today, in the Cathedral City, you've two impressive options to choose between. The twin-spired Roman Catholic Cathedral stands on a hill above the city. St Patrick's Church of Ireland Cathedral faces it across the valley, resting on the site of the original stone church. A bit of a climb, both are worth it for the stunning city views. And, when you get your breath back, there's a Middle-Aged crypt beneath the Cathedral which houses a fascinating collection of stone carvings. (Both cathedrals only available to view from outside for now).

Modern-day Armagh City is an adventure ground of narrow lanes, hilly streets and wonderful open spaces. A stroll along the tree-lined Mall is a great introduction to city life. Places like Red Ned's are ideal spots to soak up the atmosphere, while foodies can take their pick of restaurants or coffee houses. Uluru, Embers and the Mulberry Bistro are particular favourites and all family-friendly.

Within walking distance of the city centre, the 300-acre Palace Demesne was, until 1975, home to the Archbishops of the Church of Ireland. A walk around its parkland takes you from meadow to formal gardens via a Play Park, Green Gym and an inviting Garden of the Senses.

Yes, of course, it's a friendly place. But the eagle-eyed will spot a number of other willing companions as you wander around the city. Hiding in plain sight are a whole community of gargoyles, angels and fantastical creatures. They are the work of artist Holger Christian Lönze and a tribute to the city's sacred past, with 22 of them spend their days lurking behind drainpipes or hanging out at the library. You'll even find an angel helping out with post deliveries. Airmail, naturally.
