About the Area

The quaint, traditional market town of Loulé, located about 15 kilometres north of Faro, in the Algarve, was originally founded as a Roman fort, probably in the second century B.C., but began to truly flourish after the Romans had left. By the time of the Moorish invasions in the 8th Century, Loulé was a vibrant trading centre, and continued to thrive under the Moors.

Vilamoura is more of an area than a town in itself and has grown over the past couple of decades to more or less engulf Quarteira to the east. Located virtually in the middle of the Algarve coast, within 15Km of the main airport at Faro, Vilamoura's accessibility has helped it become one of Europe's largest beach resorts. The 20 square Km of purpose built resort are home to practically every form of sport, entertainment and amenity imaginable. Combined with wide, well laid out roads, manicured gardens and public spaces and 6 golf courses Vilamoura is without doubt a world class holiday destination.

The town is built around the upmarket, 1,200 berth Vilamoura Marina which was constructed with private money in the 1970s. Facilities are extensive and the marina caters for the whole spectrum of boats from small speed boats through to 40+ metre yachts. The harbourside is the in place for the yachting set and is home to a number of smart, chic bars, restaurants and hotels. As you would expect prices are also somewhat higher than they are a little further inland.

There are plenty of excursions and boat trips going from the Marina with coastal trips to Lagos and dolphin watching trips. There are also opportunities for big game fishing with large marlin often being hooked. The area is also a haven for watersports such as parasailing, water-skiing, scuba diving and jet skiing.
