About the Area

Ballintubber (officially Baile an Tobair, meaning 'townland of the well') is a historic village nestled in the heart of County Roscommon, located in the province of Connacht, Ireland. Situated in a lush, rural landscape, the village offers a peaceful setting typical of the Irish countryside while holding deep significance in the history of the region.

The centerpiece of the village is the imposing ruin of Ballintubber Castle, a 13th-century stronghold featuring a large stone curtain wall and polygonal corner towers. Historically associated with the O'Conor Kings of Connacht, the fortress served as a pivotal defensive structure and primary residence during centuries of regional conflict, surviving numerous sieges before falling into ruin in the late 17th century.

Today, Ballintubber retains a close-knit community atmosphere centered around its traditional heritage, local sports, and surrounding agricultural countryside. Despite its rural charm, it benefits from good regional road connectivity along the N60, keeping residents easily connected to nearby market towns like Castlerea and Roscommon town.

For travelers and visitors heading to the area, the nearest airport is Ireland West Airport Knock (NOC), situated roughly 35 to 40 kilometers (around a 30-to-40-minute drive) northwest of the village. This regional hub offers convenient flights connecting the West of Ireland to major cities across the UK and Continental Europe.
