About the Area

Enniscorthy is the second-largest town in County Wexford, situated in the historic province of Leinster in southeastern Ireland. Nestled along the picturesque banks of the River Slaney, the town is renowned for its steep, charming streets, rich heritage, and vibrant local community. It serves as a key commercial hub for the surrounding countryside, blending traditional rural Irish life with modern culture and commerce.

The town is steeped in rich military history, best highlighted by the imposing 13th-century Enniscorthy Castle. Positioned in the town center, this well-preserved Norman fortress offers visitors insights into local history, including the 1916 Rising and the town's prominent role in regional events. Enniscorthy is also famous for Vinegar Hill, the site of the pivotal battle during the 1798 Irish Rebellion, which overlooks the town and provides panoramic views of the surrounding countryside alongside the National 1798 Rebellion Centre nearby.

In addition to its historic landmarks, Enniscorthy boasts impressive architecture and modern cultural acclaim. St. Aidan's Cathedral, designed by the celebrated architect Augustus Welby Pugin in the 19th century, dominates the town skyline with its soaring gothic spire. The town also gained international recognition as the primary setting for Colm Toibin's acclaimed novel Brooklyn and its Oscar-nominated feature film adaptation, drawing literary and film enthusiasts to its vintage streets.

While Waterford Airport is geographically closest (-64 km southwest), it currently lacks active commercial flights. The nearest major international airport with comprehensive flight connections is Dublin Airport (DUB), located roughly 120 km north. Travelers can easily reach Enniscorthy from Dublin Airport via direct hourly coach services (like Wexford Bus and Bus Éireann) or a straightforward drive down the M11 motorway.
