ABOUT THE AREA

Montjoire is a commune in the Haute-Garonne department of southwestern France.

The Haute-Garonne department is located in the South of France. It is one of the 8 departments of the Midi-Pyrenees region. Haute-Garonne is not a historical area of France. Indeed, it is an administrative division composed of different areas of both the Languedoc-Roussillon region and Gascony, a former French region. The department is home to more than one million inhabitants. The towns of Saint-Bertrand-de-Comminges, Rieux-Volvestre and Saint-Sulpice-sur-Leze are amongst the most beautiful towns of France.

From East to West, the Canal du Midi and the Canal de Garonne run through the Haute-Garonne department. The Garonne river travels all over the area running through three geographical zones. First, a mountainous area predominantly composed of beech trees and located in the South of Haute-Garonne, is part of the Pyrenean Massif. Along with this, the Pyrenees can be seen from the South of the department as a natural barrier. Then, a first plain is situated in the North of the department. Finally, the large Toulouse plain stretches all over the North of the Haute-Garonne department. Both plains are dominated by oak trees and poplars.

To sum up, you will find numerous rural landscapes in the South of the department while in the North, close to Toulouse, towns are much more urbanized and look like a metropolis. This scenery distinctness makes the Haute-Garonne department very particular.
