ABOUT THE AREA

Arnstadt is a town in Ilm-Kreis, Thuringia, Germany, on the river Gera about 20 kilometres south of Erfurt, the capital of Thuringia. Arnstadt is one of the oldest towns in Thuringia, and has a well-preserved historic centre with a partially preserved town wall. Thuringia, officially the Free State of Thuringia, is a state of central Germany, covering 16,171 square kilometres, the sixth smallest of the sixteen German states. It has a population of about 2.1 million. Erfurt is the capital and largest city. Other cities are Jena, Gera and Weimar.

A variety of landscapes, a fabulous wealth of castles and palaces, an unforgettable diversity of culture and architecture and so many fun things to do – this is what the holiday destination of Thuringia is all about. Nobody has managed to capture the beauty of Thuringia quite so pertinently as Goethe, who said: 'Where else in Germany can you find so many wonderful things in such close proximity?'

Erfurt, Weimar, Eisenach and the list goes on... The towns and cities of Thuringia are well worth a visit with their blend of history and tradition, culture and leisure activities, the modern and the classic. In Weimar, named European City of Culture in 1999, the city's eventful past is reflected at virtually every turn. The Goethe-Schiller monument in front of the German National Theatre and a total of 27 museums have been attracting visitors in their swathes for generations. 16 remarkable buildings have been added to the UNESCO World Heritage list and towns such as Erfurt, Jena, Eisenach, Altenburg, Meiningen and Gotha have a wealth of culture of their own. St. Mary's Cathedral and the Church of St. Severus on Domplatz square, Europe's longest fully preserved bridge lined with buildings (Merchants' Bridge) and the long-established ega garden exhibition are just some of the attractions in Erfurt. Art and culture in Thuringia are closely connected to the work of leading figures on the German cultural and intellectual scene. Museums, theatres, exhibitions and concert halls are alive with the spirits of writers Johann Wolfgang von Goethe and Friedrich Schiller, composer Johann Sebastian Bach and painters Lucas Cranach and Otto Dix.
