Cocoa and agriculture

The finca is known for its organic cocoa production. It includes modern, resistant cocoa plants that consistently produce larger yields. The property is fully farmed and ready for immediate use. The focus is on sustainability: cultivation is carried out without chemical fertilizers and the harvest is traditionally transported by mule. In addition to cocoa, there is a small rubber plantation, which provides a stable additional income.

Sources of income:

The finca offers two main sources of income:

Cocoa production: the annual harvests are growing steadily and the income benefits from the current rise in the price of cocoa.

Inn: A small restaurant with a panoramic terrace and two guest rooms invite tourists and nature lovers.

Rubber plantation: In addition to cocoa, there is an old seringa (rubber plantation) that is currently not being cultivated. This could also be continued again

Additional opportunities: There is potential for investors to expand the area under cultivation or to diversify into other lucrative crops such as açai, coffee or fruit trees. There is also the possibility of developing ecotourism on the farm, thanks to the scenic beauty and rich biodiversity of the region.
