Accessible by dirt road, these lands, with a slightly steep slope, have many holm oaks, some centenary, the holm oak is an evergreen tree, symbol of the Mediterranean ecosystem and essential for the Iberian meadow. It is known for its drought resistance, longevity, adaptability, and its traditional use in animal feed, timber production, and tannin extraction. It is also one of the trees used in cork oak forests. The cork oak forest is an agro-silvo-pastoral system very common in the Alentejo, being an ecosystem of human origin that brings together pastoralism, agriculture and forestry. This tree has protection status by Decree-Law No. 169 201 of 25 May.

There is the possibility of building a small dam, it has a license from the Portuguese Environment Agency (APA).
