ABOUT THE AREA

Maxstoke is a small, picturesque civil parish and hamlet situated in the North Warwickshire district of Warwickshire, England. Surrounded by peaceful countryside and rolling farmland, the village offers a quiet rural atmosphere steeped in centuries of English history. Despite its proximity to major West Midlands urban centers, Maxstoke maintains a distinctly scenic and tranquil character.

The area is best known for its rich historical landmarks, most notably Maxstoke Castle, a moated 14th-century fortified manor house that remains a private residence today. Nearby lie the ruins of Maxstoke Priory, a 14th-century Augustinian monastery dissolved during the reign of King Henry VIII. These historic structures, combined with classical timber-framed cottages and green pastures, make Maxstoke a notable destination for heritage and nature enthusiasts.

While rural, the parish is well-connected to surrounding market towns like Coleshill and Atherstone, as well as the city of Birmingham. The surrounding landscape features public footpaths, local golf courses, and quiet country lanes that are popular with walkers and cyclists looking to explore the West Midlands countryside.
