The department of Eure is in Upper Normandy, in the north of France and offers some of the best links from the UK. Its name comes from the river which runs through it.

The area boasts wonderful natural landscapes as well as a cultural heritage. Nature lovers will love the area and the local people are committed to the protection of the environment, in which agriculture plays an important role in the department's economy.

Places to visit would be Chateau-Gaillard (there are another 5 or 6 chateaux to discover) and Pointe de la Roque, as well as the gorgeous scenery (forest, countryside, plains and valleys). The towns are also full of charm and character.
