This apartment project located south of the Aburrá Valley is perfect for those looking for apartments for sale in Medellín, new apartments in Envigado.

Sabaneta lies at the southern end of the Aburrá Valley and is 1 of 10 municipalities in the Medellín metropolitan area. It's also the smallest municipality in all of Colombia, with an area of just 5.8 square miles (15 square kilometers). Sabaneta is a medium-sized town... but its friendliness and closeness convey the feeling of a village.

Like the whole Medellín area, Sabaneta enjoys arguably the world's best weather. Average high temperatures are in the upper-70s to low-80s, with lows in the 60s, all year (that's 27°C and 17°C). No heat, no air conditioning, and no screens on the windows, thanks to the 5,200-foot (1,585-meter) altitude.

Sabaneta is about as unlike Medellín as you can get in the realm of Colombian cities. The pace here is slow and laid-back. As opposed to Medellín's modern, energetic feel, Sabaneta feels like small-town Latin America... and like a community. There are a number of high-rises sprouting up around town—and even within town—but mostly you'll find clean streets, friendly people, and life with an old-fashioned, Spanish-colonial feel.

The Sabaneta town square is a picturesque, bustling social center, where you'll see young people enjoying the shady sidewalk cafés as well as sun-worn old-timers in cowboy hats sitting on a bench and solving the world's problems.

ABOUT THE AREA

If you enjoy the super modern, cosmopolitan big city, Miami-like type of location with the hustle-bustle of high traffic, high-rises, upscale apartments and condos, restaurants and supercharged nightlife with all the amenities of the U.S., then El Poblado and Laureles are definitely the neighborhoods for you... However, there is a hidden treasure amidst all this modern atmosphere.

This charming barrio (town) is hugely family-oriented, flat, walkable and not as touristy as El Poblado and Laureles. However, more and more expats discovering this authentic Colombian hamlet.

You won't find Starbucks on every corner, or high-end boutiques, but you will find outdoor cafes and restaurants, with Latin music swimming through the air.

Better brush up on your Spanish because very few people speak English. This is where you need to pull out your Google Translate and use hands and feet to communicate. That said, the people in Sabaneta are very friendly and always open to lending a hand.

Even though it's the smallest municipality in Medellin, Sabaneta touts the largest shopping mall, called Mayorca, which has over 400 shops and everything you could possibly need. One thing I enjoy most about living in Sabaneta is the walkability, especially compared to El Poblado. There are several bike stations around the barrio, which allow you to take advantage of the bike lanes to get around easily. Along with the three metro stations and plenty of buses, there is a need for a car in Sabaneta.
