About the Area

Datça is a port town in southwestern Turkey. It's situated on the narrow Datça Peninsula on the Aegean Sea. Eski Datça is an old neighborhood with stone roads and bougainvillea-covered walls. At the western tip of the peninsula are ancient Greek ruins at Knidos, a trading hub during Roman and Byzantine times. The site includes an amphitheater, a temple to the goddess Aphrodite and a 4th-century B.C. sundial.

A 50-mile stretch of pristine beaches, rustic whitewashed towns, and undulating hills of pine forests and olive groves, the Datça Peninsula is one of Turkey's secret idylls. Located in the country's south west – close to the Greek islands of Kos, Symi and Rhodes – it has ancient thyme-scented uplands that stretch out to the blue of the Aegean and Mediterranean, making for sublime, sun-drenched views.

Just outside Datça lie five hectares of bountiful vineyards. Set against the serried rows of grapes and the Mediterranean horizon, the Datça Vineyard and Winery has smart suites with sweeping views over the landscape. The location of the rooms, hidden at the back of the vineyard, allow you to take in the sunset over the blue-lipped plains from your private hot tub. All this, plus a stellar wine-tasting experience.

Old Datça (Eski Datça) was once the peninsula's main settlement but fell into disuse and had almost become a ghost town by the 1980s. Now the haunt of Datça's in-crowd, this cobblestone hamlet is flourishing again with vine-strung boutiques and vibrant bars framed by bougainvillea and buzzing with live music. Cool off with goat-milk ice cream and wander the lattice of streets, taking in the scents and sounds of the buoyant renaissance atmosphere.

Every Saturday, Datça town plays host to vendors setting up stalls under a canvas canopy and selling their wares. From utensils, leatherware and textiles to herbs, olives and the region's prized almonds and honey, this market is a weekly shopping destination for locals but a multi-sensory experience for visitors. A purpose-built steel structure now houses the kaleidoscope of fruit and vegetable stands; browse the cheese counters and ask for Turkish horse-milk 'Parmesan' if you're feeling brave.
