About the Area

Indaiatuba is a municipality in the state of São Paulo in Brazil. It is part of the Metropolitan Region of Campinas. The population is 256,223 in an area of 311.5 km2. The elevation is 624 m. The city's name derives from the Tupi language. It is an important city in one of Brazil's main industrial regions.

Indaiatuba ranks number one of the Top 100 best cities to live in Brazil. It is part of the metropolitan area of Campinas with approximately 1.150.000 inhabitants. It is a very prosperous city with numerous industrial parks and high economic potential.

The region around Campinas is developping infrastructurally:

The state of São Paulo – Brazil's largest (pop. 42 million), most economically diverse, and wealthiest – includes a little bit of everything, from the smoky industries of São Paulo city, to beach resorts that rival Rio; from a string of pleasing mountain resorts, to a fertile farming area that is the most productive in Brazil.

The most striking element of São Paulo's modern development has been its speed. During the first three and a half centuries of recorded Brazilian history (1500–1850), São Paulo was a backwater, home to a few mixed-race traders and pioneers. Today, the state of São Paulo is Brazil's economic powerhouse and as such provides one-third of the country's GNP.

On the coast the average temperature is about 68 °F (20 °C), and the annual precipitation is about 79 inches (2,007 mm); on the plateau the average temperature varies between about 64 and 68 °F (18 and 20 °C), and in the mountainous areas annual precipitation reaches 59 inches (1,500 mm). The lower third of the state is crossed by the Tropic of Capricorn, and the weather in general is mild and healthful. The coastal zone has a hot climate and heavy rainfall. On the plateau rainfall is ample as well, but diurnal temperatures are lower because of increased elevation.
