About the Area

Ballycorrigan is a picturesque townland situated in the north of County Tipperary, Ireland, forming part of the popular residential area centred around the twin villages of Ballina and Killaloe. Located on the eastern bank of the River Shannon, Ballycorrigan benefits immensely from its proximity to Lough Derg, one of Ireland's largest and most beautiful lakes. The landscape is typical of the Irish midlands, featuring rolling hills and green pastures, offering residents beautiful views, often stretching towards the Clare hills across the water. This peaceful rural setting provides an ideal escape from urban life while remaining highly connected to necessary services and recreational activities.

The primary amenity hub for Ballycorrigan is the celebrated pair of villages, Ballina (Co. Tipperary) and Killaloe (Co. Clare), which are linked by a historic 13-arch bridge over the River Shannon. These villages are steeped in history, most notably as the former capital of Ireland under Brian Ború. Today, they form a vibrant centre renowned for its watersports, sailing, fishing, and boating activities on Lough Derg. Ballina and Killaloe offer a wide array of excellent local amenities, including primary and secondary schools, shops, restaurants, and pubs, ensuring that residents of Ballycorrigan enjoy a balance of tranquil country living with dynamic community engagement and convenience.

Ballycorrigan's location is strategically advantageous for both regional travel and accessing Ireland's natural attractions. It serves as a gateway to exploring the mid-west region, with major cultural and economic centres easily accessible. The area is within a convenient driving distance of Limerick City Centre, a key commercial and educational hub, and enjoys rapid connection to the national road network via the nearby M7 motorway. Furthermore, the surrounding region offers immense recreational value, with numerous local walking trails, cycling routes, and the scenic beauty of the Arra Mountains nearby.

For international travel, Ballycorrigan is well-served by a major regional hub. The nearest major airport is Shannon Airport (SNN), located approximately 50 to 60 kilometres away. A drive to Shannon Airport typically takes around 45 minutes to an hour, making European and trans-Atlantic travel straightforward. While Dublin Airport (DUB) is farther, its extensive network makes it a viable, albeit longer, alternative. The accessibility offered by Shannon Airport enhances the appeal of Ballycorrigan for overseas buyers or for those who require frequent air travel.
