ABOUT THE AREA

Bon Repos sur Blavet is a picturesque locale nestled deep within the rolling green landscape of inland Brittany, France, specifically within the department of Cotes-d'Armor. The town is most famous for lending its name to the stunning Abbaye de Bon-Repos (Bon-Repos Abbey), a remarkable Cistercian monastery situated on the banks of the Blavet River and surrounded by the expansive Quenecan forest. The setting is one of idyllic natural beauty, where the peace and quiet of the Breton countryside prevail. The area provides a perfect escape for those who appreciate history, nature, and the tranquility of the French campagne, far removed from the bustling coastal cities.

The Bon-Repos Abbey itself is the undeniable focal point of the area. Founded in the 12th century by Alan III de Rohan, the abbey once flourished before falling into disrepair following the French Revolution. A dedicated group of enthusiasts began restoring the site in the late 20th century, bringing it back to life as a cultural and historical landmark. Today, while only vestiges of the original 13th-century church remain, the restored 18th-century buildings and cloister are highly valued. They now serve a dual purpose, hosting regular contemporary art exhibitions and a major annual sound and light show that vividly recreates the region's history, cementing the abbey as a dynamic hub of heritage and modern artistic expression.

The region's natural attractions center around the Nantes-Brest Canal and the Blavet River, which offers scenic towpaths perfect for walking, cycling, and enjoying the peaceful waterside environment. The Lac de Guerledan, Brittany's largest man-made lake, is nearby and is a major leisure spot for water sports and outdoor activities. Visitors can also explore the surrounding Quenecan forest and the unique geological formations of the Daoulas gorges. The close proximity to the Abbey and its surrounding landscapes makes Bon Repos sur Blavet a prime destination for hiking, historical exploration, and rural relaxation.

Given its central, inland location, Bon Repos sur Blavet is generally accessed via a short drive from one of Brittany's regional airports. The nearest major airport is typically Lorient Bretagne Sud Airport (LRT), which offers flights mainly within France and is located roughly 60 to 70 kilometers away, depending on the exact route. Alternatively, Rennes-Saint-Jacques Airport (RNS), the region's busiest hub, is a larger option providing a wider array of domestic and international flights. Rennes is further afield, requiring a drive of about 1.5 hours to reach Bon Repos. Travelers may also consider Brest Bretagne Airport (BES), which is located in the west and requires a comparable driving time, offering another viable entry point to this beautiful part of central Brittany.
