About the Area

Bojano is a historic and scenic town situated in the Molise region of south-central Italy, tucked along the fertile Biferno River valley at the foot of the Matese Mountain range. Known in antiquity as Bovianum, the town served as a major center for the Samnites, an ancient Italic people, before becoming a strategic Roman colony. Today, it combines deep archaeological heritage with breathtaking natural surroundings, making it a peaceful getaway off the typical tourist trail.

The town's center is centered around Piazza Roma, offering a vibrant local life filled with traditional cafes, artisan shops, and historic architecture. Landmarks such as the Cathedral of San Bartolomeo, originally constructed in the 11th century and rebuilt over the centuries, showcase the area's rich religious and architectural history. Additionally, the medieval ruins of the Pandone Castle, perched on the slopes above the town in the ancient district of Civita Superiore, provide panoramic views across the valley.

Bojano is particularly famous for its agricultural heritage, clean freshwater springs, and world-class dairy products. It is celebrated across Italy as a prime producer of fresh mozzarella di bufala and fior di latte cheese, crafted using traditional techniques passed down through generations. Outdoor enthusiasts also utilize the town as a base for hiking, mountain biking, and exploring the lush trails of the surrounding Matese Regional Park.

The nearest major commercial gateway for international travelers heading to Bojano is Naples International Airport (NAP)—also known as Naples Capodichino Airport—located approximately 95 to 100 kilometers to the southwest (roughly an hour and twenty minutes by car). Alternatively, travelers flying from broader international hubs can access the town via Rome Ciampino Airport (CIA) or Rome Fiumicino Airport (FCO), both located around 200 to 220 kilometers to the west and connected to Bojano by direct regional train and bus routes.
