San Michele is situated in the heart of the Garfagnana hills approximately 1 hour north of Lucca.

The village is split into two by the River Serchio, with the 'historic village' on one side, and the 'new village' on the other. The 'historic village', which is where the property is located, is best described as a small mediaeval hamlet, and consists of only few houses, and a 'castle' which is still inhabited by locals in the summer. Properties are reached on foot, via original mule track style 'roads'.
