ABOUT THE AREA

Nestled amidst the verdant foothills of the Troodos Mountains, approximately 25 kilometers north of Limassol, lies the charming village of Lania. This picturesque settlement, also known as Laneia, is a quintessential example of traditional Cypriot life, where time seems to slow down. Characterized by its quaint, cobbled streets, houses adorned with vibrant bougainvillea, and a strong sense of community, Lania offers a tranquil escape from the bustling pace of city life. The village's rich history is evident in its well-preserved architecture, including the impressive Panagia Chrysolanitissa church with its ancient icon, and its traditional wine presses, testaments to its deep roots in viticulture.

Lania's allure extends beyond its aesthetic beauty; it is deeply entwined with Cyprus's winemaking heritage. According to local lore, the village derives its name from Lana, the daughter of Dionysus, the ancient Greek god of wine and pleasure, a clear indication of its long-standing connection to viticulture. Lania is one of the designated villages in the Commandaria region, famed for producing the world's oldest named wine still in production. Visitors can explore local wineries, sample the unique sweet Commandaria wine, and discover museums dedicated to the traditional wine and olive oil production processes, offering a fascinating glimpse into the village's agricultural past and present.

Despite its serene rural setting, Lania benefits from excellent connectivity to the wider island. Its location on the main Limassol to Troodos road makes it easily accessible, allowing residents and visitors to enjoy the peace of the countryside without being isolated. Limassol, Cyprus's second-largest city and a major economic and cultural hub, is just a short drive away, providing access to a comprehensive range of amenities, including shopping centers, fine dining, cultural attractions, and a vibrant nightlife, as well as beautiful beaches and a bustling marina.

For international travelers, Lania is conveniently located between Cyprus's two main international airports. Paphos International Airport (PFO) is the closest, situated approximately 41 kilometers to the west. Larnaca International Airport (LCA), the island's largest airport, is located about 63 kilometers to the east. Both airports offer regular flights to and from a wide range of European and international destinations, ensuring easy access to this enchanting Cypriot village for residents and tourists alike. The relatively short and scenic drives from either airport make Lania an ideal and accessible destination for those seeking a blend of traditional charm, natural beauty, and modern convenience.
