ABOUT THE AREA

Zalasewo is a rapidly growing village located in the administrative district of Gmina Swarzędz, within Poznań County in west-central Poland. Situated in the heart of the Greater Poland (Wielkopolska) Voivodeship, it has transformed from a quiet agricultural settlement into a thriving suburban hub. Its proximity to the regional capital, Poznań, makes it a popular choice for young families and professionals who seek a quieter lifestyle without sacrificing the urban conveniences of the nearby city.

The village has a history that stretches back to the 16th century, though its modern character is defined by significant recent development. Unlike many historic Polish villages that center around a medieval square, Zalasewo is characterized by modern housing estates, new infrastructure, and expanding educational facilities. Despite this growth, it manages to retain a connection to its natural roots, with the Rów Zalasewski stream flowing through the area and various green spaces providing opportunities for recreation and equestrian activities.

Social and community life in Zalasewo revolves around its modern primary schools, sports fields, and local agritourism farms. The village is well-connected to Swarzędz and Poznań via an efficient public transport network, allowing residents to easily access the cultural and commercial offerings of the Greater Poland region. The surrounding landscape remains largely agricultural, offering a scenic backdrop of open fields that change with the seasons, characteristic of the Wielkopolska plains.

For travel and international connections, the nearest airport is Poznań-Ławica 'Henryk Wieniawski' Airport (POZ). Located approximately 20–25 kilometers to the west, the airport is easily accessible via the Poznań ring road (S11) and the A2 motorway. The drive typically takes about 30 to 40 minutes, depending on traffic, providing Zalasewo with excellent connectivity to major European cities and holiday destinations.
