ABOUT THE AREA

Petropolis is a Brazilian city north of Rio de Janeiro. Bordering the Serra dos Orgaos National Park, with its forested peaks and waterfalls, it's known as a mountain retreat for Rio residents. In the center, the Imperial Museum displays period furnishings in the former palace of 19th-century emperor Dom Pedro II. Nearby, the huge Sao Pedro de Alcantara Cathedral houses the mausoleum of the emperor and his wife.

Imperial Museum of Brazil

The Imperial Museum of Brazil was once the summer home of the former emperor, Pedro II. The large pink and white building is nowadays one of the most visited museums in the country, with historical displays including a huge golden crown and an exhibition of contemporary art. To protect the historical floor, guests have to wear specially-provided slippers to enter and it is prohibited to take photos of the inside.

Palacio Quitandinha

Built between 1941 and 1946, the Palacio Quitandinha was once a luxury resort hotel and hosted several famous stars such as Carmen Miranda and Walt Disney. Nowadays, it is a cultural center and a popular tourist attraction. The building is open to the public, allowing visitors to either explore the inside or simply sit in the beautiful surrounding lawns and admire the stunning facade of the building.

The Serra dos Orgaos National Park

This huge national park contains the Serra dos Orgaos mountain range and protects the city's natural freshwater sources. There are over 10 peaks there higher than 2,000 meters and the most famous rock formation is the distinctive Dedo de Deus (God's Finger) that appears to be a large index finger pointing into the sky.
