ABOUT THE AREA

Salema is a village located near Vila do Bispo in the Algarve, Portugal. Historically it was a fishing village, but at present it is a popular tourist destination. Think cobbled streets and tiny blue-trimmed whitewashed fishermen's cottages, dotted with chimney pots. We're pleased that Salema has stayed true to itself by retaining its values from bygone years. A fleet of brightly painted wooden boats catch sea bass, bream, octopus, sardines and mackerel. You can still watch fishermen unloading their catch each morning before mending their nets and resting after a night at sea. Meanwhile, holidaymakers enjoy the warm Algarve sunshine. Salema is a world of peaceful co-existence and that's what makes it such a delight.

The pretty village centre of Salema is a pleasure to stroll around at any time - day or evening. Eating out in Salema is always a memorable experience, with several fabulous restaurants catering for all tastes, including seafood, of course. There's plenty of choice, with a fine dining restaurant befit for the most special of occasions even said to be amongst the Algarve's finest eateries. There's a small selection of boutiques, shops, cafes and a weekly market. For those in search of a nightcap, two or three low-key cocktail bars stay open until the early hours, with a warm, friendly welcome and fun guaranteed.

The large half-mile-long beach in Salema, with its sugar-fine, golden sand, has a Blue Flag certification, meaning that it meets high standards for water quality and safety. The crystal-clear waters, free from strong waves and seaweed is ideal for swimming. At either end of the beach are quiet, secluded coves below gentle cliffs. Among the limestone rocks at the western end close to the Simply Salema villa collection, you'll find - amazingly - large fossilised dinosaur footprints, discovered in 2001 by geologists from Lisbon University. A must-see during your holiday in Salema.
