Alcora, the gateway to the district of L'Alcalaten, is one of the main tile-producing centres of Castellon.

Set in the rugged landscape of L'Alcalaten, the recent history of this town is closely linked to the development of its tile industry.

In the 18th century, the Count of Aranda founded the Royal Factory of Earthenware and Porcelain in Alcora, a pottery-producing factory of fine porcelain and earthenware pieces. This tradition is reflected in the town's Ceramics Museum, with an interesting collection of historic and contemporary ceramics.

A walk around the town takes you to the churches of La Asuncion (15th-19th centuries), San Francisco (17th century), and de Marco, with several 18th-century ceramic pieces.

Its religious architecture is also represented in numerous country chapels, including El Salvador, in the transitional Romanesque-Gothic style (13th century); El Calvario de L'Alcora, with a carved wood Crucifixion; and Sant Vicent (17th century), with its glazed dome, typical of the Levante region.

ABOUT THE AREA

The Province of Castellon is in eastern Spain. It's known for the Costa del Azahar, with beach resorts such as Benicassim, Oropesa del Mar and Benicarlo. The 13th-century Peniscola Castle has panoramic coastal views, and a botanic garden in the neighboring Artillery Park. The Columbretes Islands are a haven for nesting seabirds. Inland, trails criss-cross Mount Penyagolosa, home to red pine trees and eagles.

On the coast, endless beaches with their fine, soft sand are the perfect complement to the Mediterranean Sea's crystal-clear waters. To see it up close, find one of Castellon's many coves and get lost in its wild, captivating nature. Speaking of nature, Castellon is home to the Columbretes Islands Natural Park and Marine Reserve, a group of volcanic islets gathered into four groups, each of which are extremely valuable to the ecosystem of the Mediterranean coast.

The contrast of landscapes in Castellon is one of the things that surprise new visitors the most! Despite being a coastal province, Castellon is the second most mountainous municipality in Spain. You can see this in majestic Mount Penyagolosa, which rises 1,800+ metres high, making it one of the highest peaks in the Region of Valencia.

Of course, when you travel to Castellon, you have to discover the different personalities of its varying towns and cities. Many of its charming interior villages are true Medieval treasures. Visit and you might be surprised to see that you feel right at home in the authentic Spanish customs that date back centuries before.

A trip is not a trip if you don't soak up the culture, food and drink of the destination you are visiting. In Castellon, there are a variety of rice, fresh fish markets, homemade sausages and traditional Spanish sweets that are part of the region's historic culinary tradition and that give rise to tasty dishes like rossejat, Olla de la Plana or the iconic tombet.

The Valencian Community also known as Valencia is an autonomous community of Spain. It is the fourth most populous Spanish autonomous community after Andalusia, Catalonia and the Community of Madrid with more than five million inhabitants.
