ABOUT THE AREA

Strenquels is a commune in the Lot department in south-western France. Lot is a department in the Midi-Pyrénées region of southern France. It's home to dramatic clifftop villages such as Rocamadour, known for the Cité Réligieuse complex of religious buildings. To the northeast, the Padirac Cave has underground lakes and unusual rock formations. South, the Pech Merle Cave features prehistoric rock art. Cahors is a town known for its red wine and the Pont Valentré, a medieval bridge.

Stretching from the River Dordogne in the north to the serpentine River Lot near busy Cahors (and its renowned vineyards) and beyond, the Lot département offers an arresting landscape of limestone cliffs and canyons, hilltop towns and undulating hills carpeted in forests, fields or vines. Formerly the northern section of the old province of Quercy, the modern Lot is part of the Occitanie region, and makes for great exploring, especially if you have your own wheels.

Lot shares a border with Dordogne and is often compared to its hugely popular neighbour. While Dordogne is better known, Lot can more than hold its own and is becoming increasingly popular with those looking to escape the 'Dordogneshire'. So much more than just a bridge between Dordogne and the sunny climes of the former region of Languedoc-Roussillon, the Lot department is in fact an area of outstanding natural beauty which forms part of the stunning Lot valley.

Holidaymakers and expats searching for a French property in Lot can expect quaint villages bathed in sunshine, heritage, gorgeous food and wine, stunning scenery and fascinating caves to explore. If that isn't enough, prospective homeowners can also anticipate affordable property and the quintessential French laidback lifestyle.
