The hotel is located next to the Metaxourgeio metro station.

The Metaxourgeio area is a traditional neighborhood located northwest of the historic center of Athens. The area was built according to the plans of the architect Hr. Hansen. Its name came about naturally – once upon a time, the Metaxi silk fabric factory was located here, which operated until 1875. Despite the fact that the building has been mothballed for over a century, locals still call this part of the city by the name of the factory. Over time, the name Metaxourgeio was officially recorded. The most famous streets in this area are Achileos and Giatrakos. The first divides the area into two parts – the old one, in the direction of Piraeus Street, and the new one, in the direction of Lenormand Street. The new part has lost its original style due to the reconstructions, while the old part still preserves examples of its ancient architecture. There are many small coffee shops and restaurants here that offer traditional oriental drinks, pastries and food. Many hotels in Athens are located in the area of Larissa station, around Karaiskaki square, Metaxourgeio station.
