ABOUT THE AREA

East London, situated along the Sunshine Coast of South Africa's Eastern Cape, is a charming coastal city renowned for its pristine beaches, relaxed lifestyle, and rich cultural heritage. Known locally as Buffalo City, it sits where the Buffalo River meets the Indian Ocean, offering a scenic landscape framed by dramatic river estuaries and sub-tropical vegetation. Notably, the Buffalo River Harbour stands as South Africa's only commercial river port; unlike other major national ports like Durban, Richards Bay, and Cape Town—which are built in natural coastal bays or artificial basins—East London operates directly within a functioning river mouth. The city strikes an attractive balance between commercial significance and laid-back seaside living, making it popular among both eco-tourists and industrial investors.

The city's natural attractions revolve heavily around its shoreline, featuring world-class surfing breaks, tranquil estuaries, and expansive stretches of golden sand. Nature enthusiasts frequently venture into the surrounding coastal greenbelts to spot free-roaming wildlife, diverse marine life, and unique urban estuaries where large mangrove crabs breed right within the metropolitan boundary. Beyond its living ecosystems, East London is a treasure trove of prehistoric marvels and maritime history:

Nahoon Reef & Prehistoric Footprints: Nahoon Reef is globally famous in the surfing community as a powerful, right-hand break that produces some of the heaviest waves in the country and hosts major international competitions. Nearby, at the Nahoon Point Nature Reserve, researchers in 1964 discovered fossilized human footprints dated at roughly 124,000 years old—which were, at the time of their discovery, the oldest known fossilized human tracks in the world.

The East London Museum: In 1938, local museum curator Marjorie Courtenay-Latimer identified a strange blue fish caught off the local coast as a coelacanth—a prehistoric fish once thought to have gone extinct 66 million years ago. Today, the museum proudly displays this exact original specimen alongside what it claims to be the only known dodo egg in the world.

Cove Rock (Gompo): Geologically formed as a fossil coastal dune of aeolianite (wind-blown sand bound by calcium carbonate) featuring cross-bedding and natural blowholes, Cove Rock holds deep spiritual importance in Xhosa tradition as a sacred site and resting place for ancestral spirits. Historically called Gompo, it was famously used as a gathering place by the Xhosa prophet Makhanda Nxele in the early 19th century.

Maritime & Media History: The treacherous coastal waters surrounding Cove Rock and the broader coastline served as a graveyard of ships, including centuries of historic shipwrecks such as the Dutch East India wooden vessel Stavenisse in 1686. In modern history, the city's newspaper, the Daily Dispatch (now over 154 years old), gained international renown under editor Donald Woods, whose anti-apartheid work inspired the acclaimed film Cry Freedom.

Economically, East London serves as a major manufacturing powerhouse for the Eastern Cape, driven largely by the massive Mercedes-Benz South Africa plant located right next to the harbor, which builds C-

Class models for both domestic distribution and major global export markets. This industrial anchor brings a steady flow of business travelers and corporate investment into the region, fostering vibrant residential suburbs, high-end gated estates, and convenient modern infrastructure along the coastal corridor.

Air travel to and from the city is centered at King Phalo Airport (formerly known as East London Airport), located just 9 kilometers west of the city center. The airport operates daily domestic flights connecting travelers directly to major South African metropolises like Johannesburg, Cape Town, and Durban, making the city easily accessible for both tourists and business executives.
