ABOUT THE AREA

Fashionable Glyfada is known for sandy Glyfada Beach and for the domed St. Constantine and Helen Orthodox Cathedral, set on a tree-lined square overlooking the Aegean Sea. International designers, local boutiques, jewellery stores and galleries add to a chic beachside vibe. Clustered around the waterfront boulevard are seafood tavernas, fine-dining restaurants and stylish late-night cocktail bars.

Home turf to millionaires and popstars, this most commercial of beachy suburbs lies 16km from the Acropolis, where it proudly flaunts its 'L.A. airs'. Welcome to glitzy Glyfada, the unofficial capital of the Athens Riviera. There are luxe, leafy pockets where you might indeed be on Rodeo Drive: jazzy Kyprou and Laodikis Streets with their upscale boutiques, imported palm trees and style-conscious, outdoor cafes. Beneath it all, though, sociable Glyfada remains refreshingly grounded, with souvlaki joints, low-key cinemas and farmers markets sharing street space with trendy bars colonised by the Instagram set. Meanwhile, glossy, inked-up teens flex their latest must-have trainers up and down the marble pavements of Metaxa, the main shopping strip, like exotic herds.

Glyfada's prettier, greener and more interesting side streets present a cosmopolitan village vibe and an ever-changing carousel of new tastes and brands to be road-tested on a mostly affluent audience. The suburb's character is also nuanced by the many working families who've lived here for generations when Glyfada was still an unassuming coastal town (long before the tram line connected it to Syntagma Square and Piraeus in time for the 2004 Olympics).

Glyfada Coastline has a string of perfectly serviceable public beaches, some with free umbrellas, lining the Glyfada seafront. Punctuated by several marinas and cafes, they're easily reached from downtown Athens by tram or bus (the third beach generally has better sand and cleaner water). Many locals are happy enough to cool off here, but the peacocks head for the considerably more fashionable and photogenic Asteras Beach Resort about a kilometre further south. Asteras is a long privately developed stretch of sandy coast divided into separate leisure hubs with valet parking and all-day offerings, including Balux Pool Seaside (with an adults-only seafront pool and beach bar), and chic cafe-restaurant Ark.
